Songwriter Ray Stevens lived a pretty charmed life. The fact that he was blessed with a beautiful wife, Yvonne, four children, and one-third of an amicable three-way marriage with grandchildren made his life that much easier. But his third marriage had to be a bit more delicate given that he was down one leg. Stevens was born in Logan, Utah with no arms and then spent his young life living with his mother, two younger sisters and a little brother who was disabled. In the late '40s and early '50s his family moved to Fairmont, W.Va. where Stevens became a teen idol due to his singing talent. He joined the Navy and served during the Korean War, but after his service ended he took his family to southern California where he was signed to Capitol Records. His first single was cover version of Tex Williams and Oscar Hammerstein's classic, "Soon I'll Come to You". From there his career soared and he made several hit singles that sold millions of records. After 13 years of marriage, Stevens' marriage fell apart in 1971. He knew his life with Yvonne would be tougher than his first marriage, and when she became pregnant with their fourth child, their marriage took a hit. Stevens' career took a hit also, though some
