Category:Cue sports softwareQ: Checking if supports cookie with JS I am using an . I want to support the ability for the user to use cookies, so I know that I need to create a cookie in order to let the user select the file. On the server side, I am saving the file path to a cookie. The problem I am running into is that a lot of don't actually support cookies. So I can't just check that the request has a cookie, and then simply return true. I have tried to make an array of all the , and then try and check if the cookie exists. But that returns null too. Is there any way to simply check if the supports cookies, instead of making an array of all the inputs on the page? A: You can simply do something like this : var cookie_value = getCookie("demo"); // return the value of the cookie demo or 0 if no cookie if (cookie_value!== null) { //Show file input } Selections of "unsolvable" queries from the New York Times crossword puzzle, with corresponding answers and answers given by Wolfram|Alpha.
