Vigilantes who have found the fluffy tabby, as he is affectionately known, have been putting the iconic feline up for "auction" over the past two weeks, in a bid to make the best of his final days. Earlier this month, the feline first gained fame after The International Business Times posted a series of photos showing him posing with a made-up grumpy face, which has since become a global phenomenon. Scroll down for video Grumpy Cat the cat with a huge, glassy yellow eye will be hanging up his floppy ears after his owner died of pancreatic cancer His photos have been shared more than 2 million times on Facebook and appear to have struck a chord with people who like the picture of the furry tuxedo cat with a frown on his face. Since then, his popularity has only risen, with more than 2.3 million likes and shares on his Facebook page – and an estimated 38 million views on videos posted on YouTube. Part of the attraction of the boisterous felines is their looks: the young, overweight moggy with his

A need for increased sun protection in Australia has been revealed in a new survey, with at least 90 per cent of Australians spending more than five hours in the sun this summer. The survey, conducted by professional services firm, Deloitte, found more than half (52 per cent) of Australians will apply sunscreen during the three-month summer holidays, despite the risk of skin cancer. "There are more than two million people in Australia who are diagnosed with non-melanoma skin cancer each year, or more than 250 people diagnosed every day," Dr Evie Burgess, director of the Skin Cancer Foundation, said. "The massive increase in skin cancer rates, particularly in fair-skinned groups, is not due to increased sun protection but the number of people being in the sun. "People need to learn how to protect themselves from this preventable and potentially deadly disease." Sun protection: Getting older or older? Mr Brian King, senior partner in Deloitte's public and private sector practice, said the team behind the recent Deloitte Digital survey commissioned by the Skin Cancer Foundation has been tracking sun protection usage over many years. "We've been seeing a steady rise in sun protection use since our first report in 2012, and a greater trend of younger people using sun protection," Mr King said. "This is consistent with Australia being one of the countries where people are generally spending less time in the sun, but we're still seeing people getting more sun in the afternoons when the risk of damage is highest." Mr King said the greater use of sunscreen by people in the 30-39 age group signals a change in behaviour to match changing climate conditions. "When people are spending more time in the sun, they are using sunscreen more often to achieve the right level of protection," he said. "Yet the people who are using less sunscreen are much older, so we can expect the number of people who are getting burnt will continue to rise." Sun protection for work: A cost cutting measure? Mr King said it's unsurprising some organisations are reducing staff on the beach to save money. "This may have occurred in the past, and there may still be some businesses using this method, but businesses have experienced huge cuts to their own operating costs in recent years, meaning they often have less money to spend on health and safety. "They've also been looking at measures to save money on fuel
